The scope and intentions of Iran's nuclear program is one of the most pressing matters before the international community. The offer by Iran's top nuclear negotiator early September to return to the negotiating table has again focused attention on the efficacy of UN and unilateral sanctions, and the attendant roles of the the Security Council and the International Atomic Energy Agency. There is also for consideration the legal aspects of any use of force. These international law issues will be examined in their current and prospective contexts.

The views expressed in this seminar are those of the presenter and do not necessarily represent the views of The Australian National University.
