

Crime across international borders

Abstract

The nature of crime is changing.

Globalization is marked by increased flows of people, information and capital across borders. Globalization, together with advances in technology, has contributed to a rise in transnational crime, such as drug trafficking, people trafficking, people smuggling and money laundering.

Criminals no longer recognize state or national borders. And so our collective response to crime must therefore also overcome our borders.

- Extent of the problem
- Human Trafficking and Borders
- Organized crime's involvement
- Issues in combating the transnational crime
- Escaping justice
- Steps that are being taken by the United Nations, the United Kingdom, and other countries to prevent, detect, and prosecute transnational crime
- Should transnational crime be prosecuted by a world criminal court?