

The Institute of International Law

By Professor Joe Verhoeven

Abstract

After briefly setting out the Institute's origins and development, including some of its most interesting past resolutions in the fields of private and public international law, this seminar will consider some of the controversial legal issues it is currently considering, including the question of immunities and issues pertaining to the jus ad bellum (such as humanitarian intervention and intervention in civil conflicts). A few words in conclusion will be said on the Institute's future direction.
