Master of Laws in Migration Law

DURATION: 1 YEAR FULL-TIME | UP TO 5 YEARS PART-TIME

The fully online postgraduate Master of Laws that offers advanced understanding into the social, economic, environmental and cultural factors which drive migration law and policy.

Program overview

Often framed by high emotion, politics and headlines, there are few areas of law – in Australia or abroad – that continue to create as much attention, change and complexity as migration.

Covering domestic and global contexts, the ANU Master of Laws in Migration Law provides students with a comprehensive understanding of the social, economic, environmental and cultural factors that drive migration law and policy.

Taught by practising migration law specialists and migration agents, the program reflects the latest changes to migration legislation and policy, and provides practical insight from those working with it on a daily basis.

Alongside considering the development, application and reform of migration law, the program explores how migration law affects and influences specific areas such as skilled and business migration, family migration and refugee law.

Delivered completely online, the ANU Master of Laws in Migration Law is particularly suited to those seeking to balance postgraduate study with employment, business or other commitments.

Elective course options include:

> Contemporary Issues in Migration Law
> Refugee Law and Practice in Australia
> The Family in Australian Migration Law
> Administrative Decision Making in Australian Migration Law

For information on additional elective courses, search ‘ANU LLM Timetable 2017’.

Career options and opportunities

Through an innovative curriculum that emphasises the research, principles and methods used in professional practice, the ANU Master of Laws in Migration Law equips students with the advanced knowledge required for a broad range of career opportunities, including migration services, advocacy, policy, community services and education.
