It is my pleasure to introduce The Australian National University’s College of Law at a Glance guide.

Our college is renowned for its collegiality, teaching excellence and small class sizes. We are the intellectual home for some of Australia’s foremost experts in international, constitutional, public and private law.

Our campus is located on the shores of Lake Burley Griffin in Australia’s national capital, Canberra. We are home to five research centres, a law reform and social justice initiative and have built strong networks with lawmakers, the judiciary and legal academics throughout Australia and the world.

We strive to use our position as one of the world’s best law schools to ensure our students and scholars are not just equipped to respond to the challenges of today, but are ready to capture the opportunities of tomorrow. We invite you to join us, and become a partner in the process.

We look forward to welcoming you to ANU.

Professor Sally Wheeler OBE
Dean, ANU College of Law
We balance our global outlook with a local focus, and have a long-standing reputation for excellence in education, research and community outreach, and remain focused on our objectives to:

> shape and influence public policy, placing an emphasis on the values of law reform and social justice > use our position to help understand and address the major legal, social and political challenges of the 21st century > remain a leader in legal education and research, with the outstanding calibre of our graduates as a key measure of success

Since being established, we have attracted academics, researchers and practitioners from across Australia and abroad.

The ANU College of Law comprises:

> The ANU Law School
> The ANU School of Legal Practice

The ANU Law School is responsible for our undergraduate, postgraduate and higher degree research (HDR) programs, including the Bachelor of Laws (Honours), Juris Doctor, Graduate Certificate of Law, Master of Laws and Higher Degree Research.

The ANU School of Legal Practice (formerly ANU Legal Workshop) has over 40 years’ experience providing high-quality practical legal training to generations of lawyers. In addition to its renowned Graduate Diploma of Legal Practice, the School offers a suite of courses for law professionals to master their craft.

Reflecting our research strengths, we host five research centres: the Centres for Commercial Law; International & Public Law; Law, Arts & the Humanities; Military & Security Law; and Profession, Education & Regulation in Law.

Across undergraduate, postgraduate and research degrees, we provide a unique understanding of current law and policy. Our alumni work not only as lawyers, but as agents for social change, improving public policy and enhancing global diplomacy.

The 2018 QS World University Rankings by Subject ranked Law at ANU 12th in the world, while ANU is Australia’s number one ranked university, and 24th in the world.
EXPERT TEACHERS

We are renowned for teaching excellence and are the intellectual home for some of Australia’s foremost experts in international, constitutional, public and private law. Bringing together extensive experience and real-world insight, our teachers are experts both in their legal disciplines and in legal education. Our teaching faculty are constantly engaging with government and the profession, producing world-class scholarship and making important contributions to the development of the law and public policy.

Programs

We have world-class undergraduate, postgraduate and HDR programs of study including:

> Bachelor of Laws (Honours) (LLBHons)
> Juris Doctor (JD)
> Graduate Certificate of Law
> Graduate Diploma of Legal Practice (GDLP)
> Master of Legal Practice (MLP)
> Master of Laws (LLM)
> Higher Degree Research (PhD), (MPhil)

Associate Professor Kath Hall is an internationally recognised expert on transnational corporate corruption and foreign bribery regulation. She is advising on developing an Anti-Corruption Compliance Standard, and Chief Investigator in an Australian Research Council project on reform of private sector whistleblowing laws in Australia. She also chairs the International Bar Association Anti-Corruption sub-committee on the Drivers of Corruption.

Associate Professor Vivien Holmes teaches and researches in the fields of legal ethics, legal education and the legal profession. She has previously worked as a litigation solicitor in private and government practice, as the Registrar of the Northern Territory Supreme Court and as a member of the Social Security Appeals Tribunal. She is also the Associate Dean (Education) of the College.

Dr Ryan Goss teaches Australian Public Law, International Human Rights Law and Civil and Political Rights. He researches and works on human rights law and constitutional law. He developed his research profile at the University of Oxford, writing and publishing on UK and European human rights law. His publications include a book, Criminal Fair Trial Rights, which was longlisted for the Inner Temple Book Prize 2015, shortlisted for the Birks Prize 2015 and cited by judges in the European Court of Human Rights.
“ANU Law’s geographical location and global status mean that the teaching staff come from a diverse range of personal and professional backgrounds. Every semester, I am impressed by the academic credentials of my lecturers and the inspiring public and private sector careers of my tutors.”

STUDENT EXPERIENCE

Studying Law at ANU in Canberra is a student experience like no other. In addition to being at the heart of Australia’s legal system in the form of Parliament House and the High Court of Australia, we also offer internships, international exchanges and an extensive range of clubs and societies.

Overseas courses
We offer four specific courses based overseas – in Geneva, Alabama, Kyoto and Myanmar. Students eligible for these courses gain significant benefits from experiencing international law first-hand.

Domestic and international internships
We offer a range of internships in law firms, government departments, international bodies and non-government organisations. Some of these include internships at the prestigious World Bank Group’s Integrity Vice Presidency in Washington DC, the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Legal Aid ACT and the Permanent Court of Arbitration in the Hague.

International exchange
ANU enjoys exchange partnership relationships with over 170 high-quality universities around the world, offering opportunities to study in English as well as in another language. Popular destinations for our students include Sweden, the Netherlands, the UK and the USA.

Mooting
We have a proud tradition of competing in mooting competitions around the world, including the prestigious Philip C. Jessup International Law Moot, the IASLA Space Law Moot, the Intercollegiate Negotiation Competition (Sumitomo Cup) in Japan and the Sir Harry Gibbs Constitutional Law Moot.

In 2018, the ANU Law team won the East Asia rounds in the highly competitive World Trade Law Moot Competition, earning a spot in the international finals in Geneva.

Clubs, societies and more
ANU is home to more than 180 student clubs, offering unique educational, sporting, cultural and social opportunities. These range from the ANU Law Students’ Society (LSS) and International Law Society (ILS), through to the ANU Owls Quidditch team.

Key activities on the law calendar include the LSS Annual Law Ball (the largest of its kind in the southern hemisphere), the Social Justice speaker series, the ANU Law Revue theatre comedy production and the quarterly Peppercorn magazine – one of Australia’s leading law student publications.

We also house a dedicated law library that provides a wide range of legal resources for staff and students. The major collection strengths are public and international law, complemented by statutes and case law from every Australian jurisdiction and selected overseas jurisdictions.

4 MORE
We are committed to producing practice-ready lawyers, whether it is for work in a private firm or the government sector, and encourage students to experience the law in action through volunteering, clinical courses and internships.

Law Reform and Social Justice program

ANU Law has a strong commitment to law reform and social justice and encourages students to think about how laws can be improved to serve people better. The ANU Law Reform and Social Justice program provides opportunities for students to explore and interrogate the complex role of law in society and the part that lawyers play in promoting both change and stability. Key student-run projects include:

- Ready 4 Recognition Project
- Corporate Accountability Project
- Prison Issues Project
- Community Legal Education Project

Kimberley Community Legal Service (KCLS) hot desk

ANU Law students voluntarily staff a hot desk to help KCLS lawyers assist people with legal issues in the Kimberley region – over 5,000 kilometres away. The KCLS–ANU hot desk operates out of a small office in ANU Law, assisting seven KCLS lawyers with the myriad of requests that far outstrip their capacity to respond to. The students work in two shifts per day covering business hours in Western Australia, undertaking legal research, preparing legal submissions and case material, and are making a significant difference for legal services in the Kimberley community.

“The clients that come to us often have multiple legal needs and they are usually the most disadvantaged and disempowered. Since we have been able to receive help from the students in Canberra, it has made an enormous difference to our day-to-day work and enhances our capacity to provide a more effective service on the limited resources we have.”

Carol Wei (Solicitor, KCLS)
Clinical education

Clinical legal education provides law students with the opportunity to engage with real clients, real problems and real deadlines. Designed to foster independent learning and promote reflective practice in future lawyers, the College’s clinical offerings enable students to work onsite with essential community practices like Legal Aid ACT, the Aboriginal Legal Service (ALS) and the Environmental Defenders Office ACT. Students are exposed to the law in action and help deliver critical legal services in the process. We run clinical programs such as:

> Clinical Youth Law Program
> Community Law Clinical Program
> Indigenous Community Legal Clinic
> Environmental Law Clinical Program
> Public Interest Law Clinical Program
> International Law Clinic

“When I reflect on ANU, my time at ALS stands out as one of the highlights. For me, a rich academic experience includes practical experience, where you are able to see the clients who benefit from your work and get a better sense of what you’d like to do after graduation. Courses like the Indigenous Community Legal Clinic provide space for different types of learning to occur.”

Loren Ovens undertook the Indigenous Community Legal Clinic at the Aboriginal Legal Service (ALS) in 2016

“When experiential learning is critical to the development of important graduate attributes associated with practising law. It’s also essential to developing students’ capacity to critique and challenge existing laws, legal structures and processes. I endeavour to explicitly link theory and practice, and harness the potential of experiential learning.”

Dr Anthony Hopkins, Director of ANU Law Clinical Programs
Recognised around the world, our research has long been known for scholarly excellence and positive impact. Since our beginning, we have attracted academics, researchers and practitioners from across Australia and abroad. Together, these scholars have engaged with governments, communities and the wider legal profession to produce world-class research, and make important contributions to the development of the law and public policy.

Research in Progress

Judges and judging

Dr Heather Roberts is a leading expert in judicial swearing-in ceremonies. In 2018, she commenced a project titled ‘The Ideal Judge’ – a four-year fellowship funded by the Australian Research Council. This project explores the changing expectations of judges and judging in Australia. Applying a unique interdisciplinary methodology – drawing on history, biography and gender studies – Dr Roberts examines how judicial swearing-in ceremonies expose differences in perceptions and priorities of the ‘essential’ attributes of judges and judging. By interrogating differences over time and jurisdiction, her research aims to inform debate about how to build and maintain public confidence in the judiciary.

Ethical Supply chains

Associate Professor Jo Ford’s research looks at emerging models for regulating the risks of human trafficking and forced labour in transnational corporate supply chains. His research examines the assumptions underlying legislative models intended to promote transparency and enable consumer and market co-governance of responsible business conduct. He is also assisting to lead a multi-country study, funded by the Danish government, into how frameworks for encouraging or ensuring responsible business practices may be relevant to how we assess positive private sector contributions to strengthening institutional governance and the rule of law under the UN Sustainable Development Goals.

Governance in emergencies and emergency management

Associate Professor Michael Eburn’s research looks at the role of law in planning for and responding to emergencies – ranging from routine responses by the emergency services to whole-of-government responses to catastrophic disasters. His current research project, funded by the Bushfire and Natural Hazards Cooperative Research Centre (BNHCRC), and led by Risk Frontiers, is considering governance and legal arrangements required for effective planning and capability requirements for catastrophic and cascading events. Michael’s previous BNHCRC project on Policies, Institutions and Governance of Natural Hazards has recommended a new approach to post-event inquiries.

Law and religion

Professor Pauline Ridge’s research concerns the law’s regulation of religious financing. It addresses such questions as how to protect religious adherents from financial abuse of spiritual influence; whether and on what basis, the State may fund the expression of religious faith; and how to balance faith-motivated expressions of testamentary autonomy with the needs of a testator’s family. She is currently developing a conceptual framework for understanding the relationship of law, State and religion in this sphere in jurisdictions such as Australia, the UK, Canada and New Zealand.

From the very beginning, inclusiveness has been one of our central values. Financial or social barriers or cultural nuances should not limit students with the academic potential and commitment to learning that a quality legal education at ANU demands. We thank our generous donors for supporting our students and encouraging them to succeed in their studies.

SUPPORTING STUDENTS

Freilich Indigenous Student Scholarship in Law
KADE ALEXANDER

Kade is a Gunaikurnai man and the first in his family to attend university. He decided his best chance for improving the lives of his fellow Indigenous Australians is through a law degree.
